Improv, or improvisational theater, is a type of show where the performers create the action, dialogue, and story spontaneously, without a written script. Improv can be comedic or non-comedic, and there are many different styles.

Besides Improv Shows there are some uses of improv

you may not have thought of:

Theater

Improv is used in theatrical rehearsals to help actors discover new interpretations.

Acting schools

Improv helps students explore their emotional responses to imaginative situations.

Workplace

Improv skills can help people respond naturally to situations like customer complaints or last-minute meetings. Improvisation can also help people listen and share, and empower teams.

Theatresports

A competitive form of improv that originated with Keith Johnstone. In this form, improvisation is based on various game pretexts that are judged by the audience.
